The company was founded in 1998, but a huge wave of adoption of barcode technology has swept through the retail and industrial community in the past decade. This has led to a booming demand for barcode and label printing solutions that address everything from multi-user desktop solutions, to deployment in the Cloud and across large networks. The vast majority of the market shares are currently held by large industrial manufacturers, of which IntelliCenter and Idevia are the largest. The company is in the process of bringing a complete solution to the market, with both software and print labeling solutions, to address everything from desktop to cloud deployment. The company also has a recent application to the US Federal Government to address an existing requirement for barcode printing and the creation of a label template library. We have used the company's software to print a range of different data labels, including the Universal Product Code, as well as certificates and magnetic codes for a wide range of manufacturers. We also recently created a new in-house organization to manage and print our company's own labels, using the company's software. We have also used their software to print labels for the old and new version of the AS/NZS 4300 standard, as well as ISO 9001, GMP and GMI. The company also has a partnership with NTC in the UK, allowing them to print barcodes for all of the NTC products for a wide range of chemical, oil and gas companies. The company provides the solutions to meet the needs of the user. They have a great range of products, many of which are available for free download or small fees. Their user base is growing, which we hope will continue to grow. After we spent a lot of time looking at other software solutions, we decided on the Windows product from Scenariosoftware.com. We also decided to purchase one of their DataStream Virtualization licenses, which allows us to host and print our own data labels as well as those generated by Scenariosoftware. This product really has been a winner for us. We have been impressed with the range of products that are now available. The system is very intuitive, with many options available for customization of how the labels are printed, when they are printed and how they are automatically generated. The system supports text, barcodes, graphs and much more. We also like the system because it allows you to print your own labels, and create 82157476af
